Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Application of Low Pressure Turbines Inasmuch as a low pressure turbine works with substantially half the heat drop of a high pressure condensing turbine, its construction is more simple and there are fewer turbine elements. As the volumes of steam which pass through the turbine are comparatively greater, large blade passages are permitted, all of which conduces to the simplicity and ruggedness of the turbine and facility of design. In low pressure turbine applications, therefore, the skill of the engineer is frequently called upon, more in connection with the method of applying the turbine than in its actual design. It is the object of this pamphlet to set forth some of the considerations of which account must be taken in making such applications. The following may be cited as questions which arise when such an installation is contemplated. Is there enough steam for the low pressure turbine, and has its quantity been properly estimated? Although for preliminary purposes a sufficiently accurate guess of the available quantity of steam may be made, the use of indicator cards from the high pressure machines is advisable. The analysis of these cards may be made in a most satisfactory manner by the method described before the A. S. M. E. at Cleveland in May, 1912, by Mr. Paul Clayton. Steam meters furnish an alternative method of arriving at the desired figures, although the preferable procedure is a complete test of the boiler plant itself. It is advisable to make a deduction of 10 from the apparently available amount of steam to allow for the moisture in the exhaust from the engines. A second typical question is that of...
