Not illustrated. 1872 Excerpt: .by Dr. Macnamara in the Practitioner for September, 1871, named Remarks on Tetanus, in which is related a case of tetanus treated by chloral and calabar bean, that presented interesting thermometric variations. The following table (see page 104) is given, showing the state of the pulse, respiration, and temperature morning and evening, from the 7th, one day after the setting in of tetanus (and sixteen after tho injury) to the 31st of the month. In this table it will be seen how frequently the evening temperature exceeded that of the morning until convalescence was established. No definite proportion existed between the temperature and the rate of breathing or frequency of the pulse, nor was the temperature commensurate with the degree of spasm as, according to the history of the case, from the 10th to the 14th, the spasms of pain were greatest. On this day they became less, and so continued until the 17th; subsequent to the 20th they were merely nominal, and afterwards the patient gradually recovered. The author observes that in cases of tetanus, if the temperature rises to 101 there is danger: should it rise suddenly from 99 to 100 or 102 the patient is in imminent danger, as he has seen but few cases recover after the temperature has risen to 103. A case of tetanus under the care of Dr. G. Johnson was brought before the Medico-Chirurgical Society (see the British Medical Journal for December 10, 1870, p. 642) in which...
