Guerrino held his peace, and continued to do so. The king repeated his question, with an un-called-for sternness, adding, Time flies, in a petulant and impatient tone. Sire, retorted Guerrino, did you not stipulate to give me the whole day for my wooing? and the sun has not yet set. Thus they remained in suspense, until the wasp made his appearance. In he came, busily humming about the room, and at length he went buzzing round the head of one of the princesses. She was afraid, and drove it away with her hand. Twice, thrice, the same action was repeated. Guerrino s time had come. Advancing to the princess who had thus been assailed, and laying his hand on her shoulder, he thus addressed the king: Sire, this is your daughter Golden Hair; and, .by God s bounty, my bride....
